Section 7. Description

The house at 715 Regester Avenue is a two-and-a-half story dwelling in the Colonial Revival style. It is in a residential area, on a block of lots and houses of similar size, all facing the street. The house faces mainly north (actually slightly northeast). Regester Avenue (which marks the south border of Stoneleigh and the north border of Anneslie) is a straight, two-lane, two-way road that is fairly heavily traveled because it runs perpendicular to, and connects, two major north-south routes—Loch Raven Boulevard to the east, York Road to the west.

Exterior

The house is a two-bay, two-pile, side-passage dwelling with a gable roof. It is constructed of unpainted red, machine-made bricks in running bond. Most windows are 6/6 (except where noted below), and there is a flat arch over each window and doorway. The main roof (and other roofs) are of asphalt shingles. A plain wood cornice encircles the house. The house has a concrete foundation at basement level.

Fenestration on the front facade is symmetrical. The front door is on the left of the first floor. The door's wooden architrave features fluted doric pilasters and a triangular pediment with central design, in relief, of a single corn stalk. The wooden door has three vertical glass panes on top, and below, a pair of recessed square panels above four recessed panels in a cross pattern. On the right side of the front facade is a bay window, of three side-by-side windows, with a hipped roof. The second floor has two windows, with painted wood louvered side shutters, located directly above the first-floor fenestration. A stoop (with a red brick border and square polished red tiles in the center) sits in front of the main doorway.

Both sides of the house have asymmetrical fenestration on the first two floors, and, at attic level, one window centered in the gable. The east facade first floor has two windows on each side and a wooden door (with eight glass panes over a horizontal recessed panel) to the left of center. A six-sided stained redwood deck (an apparent recent addition) with a balustrade of simple, squared posts sits in front of the door and the left window, with two steps leading up to it on the right. The second floor has three windows directly above the first floor fenestration. The window over the door sits about [one foot?] lower than the windows on each side.

The west facade's first floor has—from left to right—a wooden door with ten glass panes (with a small concrete stoop and two steps to the left), an outside chimney, a six-light window, and a pair of side-by-side windows. The second floor's two windows are centered above the windows on the first floor.

The yard slopes away at the sides of the house, putting the basement at ground level in back. An extension—enclosed in concrete at basement level, with a screened porch on the first floor—dominates the right two-thirds of the back facade. The porch has a flagstone floor with red brick border, and an shed roof supported at the sides by wood siding. Floor-to-ceiling screened panels (six facing the back, three on each side), sit just outside painted metal balustrades (suggesting that the floor-to-ceiling-screens were added later). The present owners believe the extension was built around 1960.

At basement level, on the left, is a white garage door of painted steel with sixteen recessed panels. The porch extension juts out about 12 feet perpendicular to the back facade, just past the garage door. On the west side of the extension, at basement level, is a wooden door with four panes over two horizontal recessed panels. The front of the extension has two two-light, horizontal sliding windows. Another such window is on the east side of the extension.

The first floor of the back facade has one window to the left of the porch. Within the porch, on the right side, is an entry with two wooden doors: a fifteen-light inner door and an outer door of eight panes over a horizontal recessed panel. The second floor has just one window to the left of center (not corresponding to the fenestration below).

Interior

The interior has a side-hall plan: The front door opens to a stair hall with the kitchen straight ahead, the living room to the right, and the dining room at the southwest corner (entered from the living room or kitchen). The living room, dining room, halls, and second floor bedrooms all have oak, hardwood floors and flat, painted wood baseboards which angle into the wall at the top. All of these rooms except the living room also have a molded chair rail. All windows and doorways and most closets on the first and second floors have matching carved wood architraves. Door knobs and locks are probably brass (or brass-plated) and appear to be historic. First and second floor rooms and halls each have at least one built-in radiator (flush with the wall, usually under a window) whose metal covers (possibly steel or iron) have strips of grating across the top and bottom.

The main stairs rise straight along the east wall of the house. They are open string with scroll brackets. The newel post has a rounded, tapered center with squared base and top, capped by a sphere. A carved, rounded handrail sits atop round, tapered balusters with square bases. A matching handrail is attached to the east wall. A closet with louvered door sits to the east of the front door, facing the base of the stairs.

The living room features a large brick fireplace and a wooden mantel with fluted doric pilasters, a stacked shelf, and, in relief in the center, an urn design. The hearth is of polished square tiles. To the right of the fireplace is the ten-light door that leads to the side yard. The room's bay window has a hardwood ledge. Two large square doorways, without doors, connect the living room to the stair hall and the dining room.

The dining room features a built-in triangular wooden cupboard in the southwest corner, with fluted doric pilasters and a broken pediment with a three-dimensional central urn. It has a pair of vertical recessed-panel doors below and, above, a door of twelve panes topped by a fanlight. A brass-plated chandelier with five lights is centered in the ceiling. A louvered door leads from the dining room to the kitchen.

The stairs to the second floor end at a central hall (at a right angle to the stairs), with a bathroom to the left, two small bedrooms to the right, and the master bedroom straight ahead. All doors at this level have two recessed panels. The bathroom's ceramic tiles (polished white squares and black trim on the walls, small white rectangles around black squares in a repeating pattern on the floor) are in excellent condition, and appear to be original or historic. In the small bedroom on the east side of the house, a door in the south wall leads to enclosed, carpeted stairs going up to the attic. The attic is finished as a bedroom, with wall-to-wall carpeting and a steep-sloping pitched ceiling.

The basement is reached by enclosed stairs on the east side of the house, entered through the kitchen. The basement has a large, carpeted room with acoustical-tile ceiling. There are two closets with louvered doors on the north and east walls, and a half-bath at the base of the stairs. On the right of the south wall (the back of the house), a wooden door with four-panes over two horizontal recessed panels leads to an unfinished workroom located directly under the porch.

Yard

The grass-planted front yard is flat, with one tree and several bushes near the house and the walkway. On the left border of the property, a concrete walkway leads from the sidewalk to the house, curving slightly at each end, in an elongated C shape. On the right border is a parking pad of double concrete strips. A brick walkway runs straight across the front facade, curving toward the parking pad and ending beside it in rectangular patio. There is a concrete pad on the northwest quarter of the backyard, in front of the garage door.

Section 8. Significance

The house at 715 Regester is notable as one of the later homes built in Anneslie, a Baltimore County suburb just north of Baltimore City, bordered by York Road, Sherwood Road, Regester Avenue, and Winwood Road. Anneslie is typical of suburbs built after World War I to house middle class families seeking detached homes with yards—not normally available in cities—and a lifestyle that promised the benefits of healthy outdoor activities, shared community life with other young families, and removal from the traffic, noise, crowding, and other problems of urban life. The rise of suburbs was made possible by new transportation systems: in the case of Anneslie, the Number 8 streetcar line (and later bus line).

The suburb of Anneslie was built on the grounds of Villa Anneslie, a grand Italianate home built as a summer home in 1855 by Frederick Harrison and named for his wife Anne. Villa Anneslie still stands, occupied as a private residence.

In 1922 the realtor Charles Steffey bought the Villa Anneslie estate and divided its 100 acres into building lots. Individual houses were constructed on the land, in stages, from 19 _____ to 19 _____. As a Colonial Revival house, 715 Regester represents just one of the variety of housing types found in Anneslie—including Bungalows (or Craftsman Cottages), American Foursquare houses, English Bungalows, Spanish Bungalows, and Spanish Villa styles.
